ANALOGY IS ALL WE HAVE! *

LINGUISTICALLY SPEAKING

There is no "evidence" of free will. Yet we experience nothing else.

"Reality" consists of objects only — — no relationships the significance of those objects should be given another word. Not less valuable, just different.

The pollution of language screws up philosophy.

Neither free will nor determinism "exist" (in the same sense as this chair exists) i.e. available to our senses. perceivable.
We perceive some aspects of reality, we create others!

* outside of perceptual reality.

1st and 2nd order realities is not the best way to talk about it. Neither is concrete and abstract. Maybe perceptual and conceptual. Inevitably there will be an area where the concept is vague.

But it definitely belongs in the area of conceptual as opposed to perceptual reality.

★ Can we say we "perceive" our innermost thots and feelings. How do emotions fit in here. Of course, every theory is only an analogy to perceptual reality and is therefore limited in application. It's not the thing itself only a way to talk and think about it.

Is perceptual reality prime?

Talking about it, is not it.

People can be wrong for 2 reasons. ① because they misunderstand the concepts involved. or ②
What actually happens when a man insists the chair is a tree.
Is there a more subtle example of this problem?
Could it be that all disagreements are actually over which definition to apply?

* Nouns should refer to a specific object, not a class of objects. We create the class, not the specific object. The class is an abstraction. like freedom. A specific chair is not like freedom.

Is it possible to distinguish between conceptual and perceptual. This is a problem of linguistics, not life. ★ (4)

Ethnocentrism is in villages who have no info on other people. They think there way is "the" way. Actually they don't even think that. They can't imagine anything else.

Ethnocentrism is actually a huge lack of imagination. Are imagination and individuality synonymous. the modern world has no excuse except inertia, stupidity, stubborness.

You Can Be a Genius

Intelligence is not the key word. ★ there are 2 words to consider. Desire to learn and Skill with words.

the Desire to Learn will overcome all handicaps; but nobody can give you that. I can give you the ~~a~~ linguistic skills. You must believe that linguistic is the key. I can't prove it. Yoga is ★ also a way. There are many paths. They don't all lead to the same place. Who said they should?

(We must write as simply as children)

You can grow and become wiser. (You'll never become wise) Your time scale is not like anyone else's. Others may learn faster than you. So what? You are both infinitely far from achieving infinity. Any amount of finite knowledge remains finite.

★ Usually, when asked to prove
★ my position is correct, I'm expected to disprove other theories.
● How does showing the truth of another theory disprove the truth of mine.

Greg "proves" me wrong by giving the truth of another theory.

Intelligence may can be "broken down" into 2 less abstract words: desire and skill.

Intelligence can be defined as skill with categories. Words are the most common type of categorical thinking we do.

If you don't have the desire to learn, you can't resent your circumstances. And you can't kid yourself either. If you want to learn you will. It can start right now.

PLEASE (on 3 consecutive pages) read this preface before you go on to page 1.

~~This is a new kind of philosophy~~ book. It recognizes the non-linear, simultaneously changing non-categorical, non-elementalistic natures of unspeakable "reality". The statements herein are not the world. If you read them out loud they are puffs of air — if not they remain dry pigment on shredded and mashed ~~trees~~ and bleached trees.

There is no proper order there is no incorrect order. Some combination will be fruitless Others might trigger tremendous insight and alter your life.

Every statement is absolutely true because couched in negative terms. If you disagree with any of the Statements - the burden of proof falls on you.

Statements and Meta-statements
Any statement can be either a statement or a meta-statement.

The idea is to rearrange the cards in any order you desire or stumble on. The right order is the one that triggers a new thought. But that depends on you as much as what's written. You must read actively. You must do more than that. You must do it all. You must desire to grow and learn. You can't fake it. You mustn't try to fake it.

Some statements are about the World - some are about other statements its very important to recognize the difference.
